INTRODUCTION

“Contribution of labour migration to the national economy of the labour sending countries is well understood. This requires and demands the responsibility of the Government, National and International Non-Governmental Organizations working towards the protection and wellbeing of migrant workers in ensuring safe migration of every individual leaving country.”

In the global text, the term labour migration is generally specified as “a cross-border movement for the purposes of employment in a foreign country.” Among other contributions the direct benefit the migrant workers bring to their country is remittance money. Countries like Sri Lanka persistently depend on remittance money and more than 10% of GDP of Sri Lanka was supported by remittance in 2016. This guidebook will be a source of guidance to individuals who are directly or indirectly connected with labour migration and organizations working for migrant workers.

The contact details and brief summary of available services provided in the directory will facilitate the individual to access required services at Government and Non-Governmental Organizations. At the same time, CARITAS Sri Lanka believe that this guidebook will also assist to strengthen network among the like-minded organizations and it will encourage giving improved services to those who are in need in the scope of migration nexus.

FOREWORD

In accompanying migrants, the Catholic Church fulfills her specific pastoral apostolate not only to the migrant and his or her family but to the whole humanity. This mission leads to 'Respecting all cultures, religions and traditions and creating the spirituality of safeguarding the dignity of each person who migrate for different reasons that entrust a great demand on him or her.

As labour migration plays an important role in a country's development sector, it is important to ensure regular, fair and safe migration procedures in our nation as a sending country and ensure the same in receiving countries as well. We realize that achieving the above reality is not easy only with the involvement of the government or any single NGO. Yet it is a collaborative task that even the migrants and their families should take part to achieve the goal of migration.

The root causes of migration in Sri Lanka includes mainly unemployment or under employment especially for women, youth and the marginalized. The majority of migrant women belong to disadvantaged communities where problems of housing, education, alcoholism and domestic violence prevail. Added to this situation is the ignorance among migrants that leads to irregular and unsafe migration where at times migrants and their families face many abuses and threats.

In responding to this apostolate, for a long period of time Caritas Sri Lanka has been an instrument for uplifting the dignity of vulnerable migrants who came to the doorstep of Caritas Sri Lanka.

Caritas Sri Lanka in safeguarding the rights of migrants and their families, has played a major role in providing necessary knowledge, training, expertise and guidance so that they are equipped to face the situation well.

It is hoped that this third edition of the Guidebook done with the collaboration of Sri Lanka Foreign Employment Bureau will help the vulnerable and ignorant individuals in the process of discernment and to make the right choice regarding safe and regular migration and to reap greater benefits of migration.

Fr. Mahendra Gunatilleke
National Director,
Caritas Sri Lanka

PREAMBLE

Caritas Sri Lanka (CSL) being the social arm of the Catholic Church has the advantage of 50 years of experience working with grassroots level communities. CSL recognizes that migration is a right and to respect it and ensure it is done in a safe way. A system needs to be developed to help victims of labour migration to seek legal redress and also address other grievances to enable smooth reintegration with family and community, which is what CSL together with the Swiss Development Cooperation (SDC) developed a project named “free legal aid and legal services for migrant workers and their families” which aims to provide a suitable system for Safe Labour Migration.

Main part of the project was to compile an information booklet on institutes dealing in labour migration. This booklet will be distributed among the Partners and Paralegals under the SDC project and among the Development Officers working in the Districts to give them awareness about the government and non-government institutes that work for labour migration.

Whatever the reasons, migrants can become vulnerable at many stages of their journey as they travel from home countries to their destination. You may lose contact with family, fall sick, be isolated or detained, which can lead to other difficulties and needs. Losing contact with family is common consequence of migration that leave families wondering about the fate of their loved ones. This uncertainty is not only an emotional strain; it can also have economic, legal and administrative consequences for those left behind. It is for these vulnerable persons that the RCRC seeks to re-establish family contacts and access them regardless of their legal status.

Some of these areas embrace psychosocial support, prevention of drug abuse and sexual diseases. This compilation does not extensively include all government and non-governmental organizations that work in the above mentioned areas. Furthermore, the compilations that are to be made in the future will enhance this referral, advancing it with more detailed information.
